

Designed by Masao Kinoshita, who was incarcerated in Rohwer concentration camp during WWII and later served in the US Military Intelligence Service.

Located at the south entrance, a mural by Roger Shimomura depicts the life of Gordon Hirabayashi, who resisted the WWII forced removal.

Built around 1906. Served many Asian immigrant children, until December 21, 1921 when students marched up Jackson Street to newly built Bailey Gatzert School.

New gate marks entrance to communal bathhouse, the only one preserved intact in the US. Served many Nikkei before WWII, who came to soak in the baths after school, dinner and sports.
