

Library podcast

Thrilling Tales, Storytime for Grownups presents: “The Hammer of God” by G.K. Chesterton

[00:00:05] Welcome to the Seattle Public Libraries. Podcasts of author readings and library events, a series of readings, performances, lectures and discussions, library podcasts are brought to you by the Seattle Public Library and Foundation to learn more about our programs and podcasts. Visit our web site at W W W dot SPL dot org to learn how you can help the Library Foundation. Support the Seattle Public Library. Go to Foundation dot SPL dot org.

[00:00:39] Welcome to Thrilling Tales Seattle Public Libraries, Storytime for Grown-Ups. My name is David. I'm a librarian here. I work up on the third floor in the Reader Services Department. Thrilling Tales happens on the first and third Monday of every month right here. It's lovely to see you all. Last week, we had a contemporary story, a brand new story with all the dark humor and shocking violence of the movie Pulp Fiction. This week is rather a dramatic change of pace. It's a little bit more like Masterpiece Theater. The story is from a century ago and it is a mystery story. Who done it? Written by one of the true masters of the form, G.K. Chesterton, who created his sleuth, Father Brown, somewhat in response to the prevailing sleuth of the time, Sherlock Holmes, and created a rather different character who is warmer and more interested in a different kind of mystery, as I think you'll see as the story goes on. This is not an April Fools, by the way. The story is a little bit more in line with yesterday, which was Easter. So without any further ado then.

[00:01:56] Today's story. “The Hammer of God” by G.K. Chesterton.

[00:02:03] The little village of Bow and Beacon was perched on a hill so steep. That the tall spire of its church seemed only like the peak of a small mountain. At the foot of the church stood a Smithee generally read with fires and always littered with hammers and scraps of iron opposite to this over a rude cross of cobbled paths was the Blue Boar. The only inn of the place it was upon this crossway in the lifting of a leaden and silver daybreak that the two brothers met in the street and spoke. The one was beginning the day, and the other finishing it. The Reverend and Honorable Wilfred Bowen was very devout and was making his way to some austere exercises of prayer or contemplation at dawn. Colonel the Honorable Norman Bown, his elder brother, was by no means devout and was sitting in evening dress on the bench outside the Blue Boar drinking. What the philosophic observer was free to regard either as his last glass on Tuesday or the first on Wednesday. The colonel was not particular. The bones were one of the very few aristocratic families really dating from the Middle Ages. But like more than one of the really ancient houses had rotted in the last two centuries into mere drunkards and Dandi degenerates till there it even come a whisper of insanity.

[00:03:28] Certainly there was something hardly human about the Colonel's wolfish pursuit of pleasure. He was a tall, fine animal, elderly, but with hair still startlingly yellow. He would have looked merely blond and leonine, but his blue eyes were sunk so deep in his face that they looked black. They were a little too close together. He had very long yellow mustaches on each side of them, a fold or furrow from nostril to jaw, so that a sneer seemed to cut his face over his evening clothes. He wore a curious, pale yellow coat that looked more like a very light dressing gown than an overcoat, and on the back of his head was stuck, an extraordinary broad brimmed hat of a bright green colour. Evidently, some oriental curiosity caught up at random. He was proud of appearing in such incongruous tyre's proud of the fact that he always made them look congruous. His brother, the curate, had also the yellow hair and the elegance. But he was buttoned up to the chin in black and his face was clean shaven, cultivated and a little nervous. He seemed to live for nothing but his religion. And there were some who said, notably the blacksmith who was a Presbyterian. That it was a love of Gothic architecture rather than of God.

[00:04:45] And that is haunting of the church was like a ghost, was only another, and pure turn of the almost morbid thirst for beauty which sent his brother raging after women and wine. This charge was doubtful. While the man's practical piety was indubitable, indeed, the charge was mostly an ignorant misunderstanding of the love of solitude and secret prayer, and was founded on his being found kneeling not before the altar, but in peculiar places in the crypts or gallery, or even in the belfry. He was at the moment about to enter the church through the yard of the smithy, but stopped and found a little as he saw his brother's cavernous eyes staring in the same direction. On the hypothesis that the Colonel was interested in the church, he did not waste any speculations. There only remained the blacksmith's shop, and though the blacksmith was a puritan, and none of his people, Wilfred Bowen had heard some scandals about a beautiful and rather celebrated wife. He flung a suspicious look across the shed, and then the kernels to the laughing to speak to him. Good morning, Wilfred. He said, like a good landlord. I'm watching Sleepless Lee over my people. I'm going to call on the blacksmith.

[00:05:58] Wilford looked at the ground and said, the blacksmith is out. He's over it, Greenfield. I know, I answered the other with silent laughter. That's why I'm calling on him. Norman, said the cleric with his eye on a pebble in the road. Are you ever afraid of thunderbolts? What do you mean? Ask the colonel. Is your hobby meteorology? I mean, said Wilford, without looking up, do you ever think that God might strike you in the street? I beg your pardon. So the kurta. I see your hobby is folklore. I knew your hobby is blasphemy, retorted the religious man. Stung and the one live place of his nature. But if you do not fear God, you have good reason to fear a man. The older raised his eyebrows politely for your manners. Barnes, the blacksmith, is the biggest and strongest man for 40 miles round, said the clergyman sternly.

[00:06:55] I know you're no coward or weakling, but he could throw you over the wall. This struck home being true, and the lowering line by mouth and nostril darkened and deepened for the moment, he stood with a heavy sneer on his face. But in an instant, Colonel Bone had recovered his own cruel good humor and left, showing to dog like front teeth under his yellow mustache. In that case, my dear Wilfred, he said quite carelessly, is wise for the last of the bones to come out partially in armor. And he took off the queer round hat covered with green, showing that it was lined within with steel. Wilford recognized it indeed as a light Japanese or Chinese helmet torn down from a trophy that hung in the old family hall. It was the first hat to hand, explained his brother airily. Always the nearest axe and the nearest woman.

[00:07:50] The blacksmith is away at Greenfield, said Wilfred quietly. The time of his return is unsettled.

[00:07:58] And with that, he turned and went into the church with bowed head crossing himself like one who wishes to be quit of an unclean spirit. He was anxious to forget such grossness in the cool twilight of his tall Gothic cloisters. But on that morning, it was fated that his still round of religious exercises should be everywhere, arrested by small shocks as he entered the church, hitherto always empty at that hour. A kneeling figure rose hastily to its feet and came towards the full daylight of the doorway. When the curate saw he stood still with surprise, for the early worshipper was none other than the village idiot, a nephew of the blacksmith, one who neither would nor could care for the church or for anything else. He was always called Mad Joe, and seemed to have no other name. He was a dark, strong, slouching lad with a heavy white face, dark, straight hair, and a mouth always open. As he passed the priest, his moon calf countenance gave no hint of what he'd been doing or thinking of.

[00:08:59] He'd never been known to pray before. What sort of prayers was he saying now?

[00:09:05] Extraordinary prayer, surely Wilford Bone stood rooted to the spot long enough to see the idiot go out into the sunshine and even to see his dissolute brother hail him with a sort of avuncular jocularly. The last thing you saw was the colonel throwing pennies at the open mouth of Joe with a serious appearance of trying to get. This ugly, sunlit picture of the stupidity and cruelty of the earth sent the acetic finally to his prayers for purification and new thoughts. He went up to a pew in the gallery, which brought him under a colored window, which he loved and always quieted his spirit. The blue window with an angel carrying lilies. There he began to think less about the halfwit with his livid face and mouth like a fish. He began to think less of his evil brother, pacing like a lean lion in his horrible hunger.

[00:10:00] He sank deeper and deeper into those cold and sweet colors of silver blossoms and sapphire sky.

[00:10:09] In this place, half an hour afterwards, he was found by Gibb's village cobbler who had been sent for him in some haste.

[00:10:19] He got to his seat with prompted food, for he knew that no small matter would have brought Gibbs into such a place at all. The cobbler was, as in many villages, an atheist, and his appearance in church was a shade more extraordinary than mad Joes.

[00:10:33] It was a morning of theological enigmas. What is it? Asked Wilfred Bo and rather stiffly, but putting out a trembling hand for his hat. The atheist spoke in a tone that coming from him was quite startlingly respectful, and even as it were, huskily sympathetic. You must excuse me, sir, he said in a horse whisper. But we didn't think it right not to let you know what once. I'm afraid a rather dreadful thing has happened, sir. I'm afraid your brother Wilford clenched his frail hands. DEVILRY. Has he done now? He cried. Involuntary passion. Why, sir? Said the cobbler, coughing. I'm afraid he's done nothing and won't do anything. I'm afraid he's done for you. Really? Better rather come down, sir. The curate followed the cobbler down a short, winding stair, which brought him out at an entrance rather higher than the street. Boeing saw the tragedy in one glance flat underneath him, like a plan in the yard of the smithy were standing five or six men, mostly in black, one in an inspector's uniform. They included the doctor, the Presbyterian minister, and the priest from the Roman Catholic Chapel, to which the blacksmith's wife belonged. The latter was speaking to her. Indeed, very rapidly, in an undertone, as she, a magnificent woman with red gold hair, was sobbing blindly on a bench.

[00:11:56] Between these two groups and just clear of the main heap of hammers, lay a man in evening dress, spread eagles and flat on his face from the height above, Wilford could have sworn to every item of his costume and appearance down to the bow and rings upon his fingers. But the skull was only a hideous splash, like a star of blackness and blood. Wilfred Bone gave but one glance and ran down the steps into the yard, the doctor who was the family physician saluted him, but he scarcely took any notice. He could only stammer out. My brother is dead. What does it mean? What is this horrible mystery? There was an unhappy silence. And then the cobbler. The most outspoken man present answered plenty of horror.

[00:12:41] Sir, he said, but not much mystery. What do you mean? Asked Wilfred, with a white face. And it's plain enough, answered Gibbs. There's only one man for 40 miles around that could have struck such a blow as that. And he's the man who had the most reason to. We must not prejudge anything.

[00:12:58] Putting the doctor a tall, black bearded man rather nervously, but it is competent for me to corroborate what Mr. Gibbs says about the nature of the blow. Sir, it is an incredible blow, Mr. Gibbs says. Only one man in this district could have done it. I should have said myself that nobody could have done it.

[00:13:16] A shudder of superstition went through the slight figure of the carrot. I can hardly understand, he said.

[00:13:24] Mr Bowen said the doctor in a low voice, had metaphors literally fail me, which is inadequate to say that the skull was smashed to bits like an egg shell. Fragments of bone were driven into the body and the ground, like bullets into a mud wall. It was the hand of a giant. He was silent a moment, looking grimly through his glasses. And then he added, The thing has one advantage and that clears most people of suspicion at one stroke, if you or I or any normally made man in the country were accused of this crime, we should be acquitted as an infant would be acquitted of stealing the Nelson column.

[00:13:59] That's what I say, repeated the cobbler obstinately. There's only one man who could have done it. He's the man who would have done it. Where's Simeon Barnes? The blacksmith. He's over, the greenfield faltered, the carrot has more likely over in France, muttered the cobbler.

[00:14:12] No, he's in either of those places, said a small and colorless voice, which came from the little Roman priest who had joined the group. Matter of fact, he's coming up the road at this moment.

[00:14:26] The little priest was not an interesting man to look at having stubbly brown hair and a round and stolid face. But if he had been as splendid as Apollo, no one would have looked at him at the moment. Everyone turned round and peered at the pathway which round across the plain below along, which was indeed walking at his own huge stride and with a hammer on his shoulder. Simeon the Smith. He was a bony and gigantic man with deep, dark, sinister eyes and a dark chin beard. He was walking and talking quietly with two other men, and though he was never especially cheerful, he seemed quite a disease.

[00:15:02] My God! Cried the atheistic cobbler. And there's the hammer. He did it with. No, said the inspector, a sensible looking man with a sandy mustache. Speaking for the first time. There's a hammer. He did it with over there by the church wall. We've left it in the body exactly as they are. All glanced round and the short priest went across and looked down in silence at the tool where it lay. It was one of the smallest and the lightest of the hammers and would not have caught the eye among the rest. But on the iron edge of it, where blood and yellow hair. After a silence, the short priest spoke without looking up and there was a new note in his dull voice.

[00:15:45] Mr. Gibbs was hardly right in saying that there was no mystery. Was at least the mystery of why so big a man should attempt so big a blow was so little a hammer.

[00:15:58] Oh, never mind that, cried Gribbles in a fever. What are we to do with Simian Barnes?

[00:16:03] Leave him alone! Said the priest quietly. He's coming here of himself. I know those two men with him. They're very good fellows from Greenfield, and they've come over about the Presbyterian Chapel. Even as he spoke, the tall Smith swung round the corner of the church and strode into his own yard. Then he stood there quite still and the hammer fell from his hand. The inspector, who had preserved impenetrable propriety, immediately went up to him. I won't ask you, Mr. Barnes, you said whether you know anything about what has happened here. You're not bound to say, and I hope you don't know, and that you will be able to prove it. But I must go through the form of arresting you in the king's name for the murder of Colonel Norman Bone.

[00:16:45] You're not bound to say anything, said the cobbler in an officious excitement. They've got to prove everything.

[00:16:52] His colonel, born dead, said the Smith quite calmly. Then he's damned.

[00:16:59] Don't, don't, don't, don't say anything. Don't say anything! Cried the atheist cobbler, dancing about in an ecstasy of admiration for the English legal system. The blacksmith turned on him over his shoulder. The August face of a fanatic.

[00:17:13] It's well for you infidels to dodge like foxes, because the world's law favors you, he said. But God guards his own in his pocket, as you shall see this day. Then he pointed to the colonel and said, when did this dog die? And he sees moderate your language, said the doctor, moderate the Bible's language and I'll moderate mine. When did he die?

[00:17:38] I saw him alive at 6 o'clock this morning, stammered Wilfred Bone. God is good! Said Smith. Mr. Inspector, I have not the slightest objection to being arrested. It is you who may object arresting me. I don't mind leaving the court without a stain on my character. You do bind, perhaps leaving the court with a bad setback on your career. The solid inspector for the first time looked at the blacksmith with a lively eye, as did everybody else, except the short, strange priest who was still looking down at the little hammer that dealt the dreadful blow. There are two men standing outside his shop, went on the blacksmith with ponderous lucidity.

[00:18:20] Good tradesmen in Greenfield who you all know who will swear that they saw me from before midnight till daybreak and long after in the committee room of our revival mission, which sits all night. We saved souls so fast in Greenport itself. Twenty people could swear to me for all that time. If I were a heathen, Mr. Inspector, I would let you walk on to your downfall. But as a Christian man, I feel bound to give you your chance and ask you whether you will hear my alibi now or in court.

[00:18:55] Inspectors seemed for the first time disturbed and said, of course I should, should be glad to hear you altogether.

[00:19:01] Now the Smith walked out of his yard with the same long and easy stride and returned to his two friends from Greenfield, who were indeed friends of nearly everyone present. Each of them said a few words which no one ever thought of disbelieving, and when they had spoken, the innocence of Simeon stood up as solid as the great church above them. One of those silences struck the group, which are more strange and insufferable than any speech madly. In order to make conversation the cure, it said to the Catholic priest, You seem very much interested in that hammer, Mr. Brown.

[00:19:38] Yes, I am. Said Father Brown. Why is it such a small hammer? The doctor swung round on him. George, it's true. He cried.

[00:19:48] Who would use a little hammer with ten large hammers lying about?

[00:19:54] Then he lowered his voice in the curate's ear and said only the kind of person that can't lift a large hammer. It's not a question of force or courage between the sexes. It's a question of lifting power in the shoulders. A bold woman could commit ten murders with a light hammer and never turn a hair. She could not kill a beetle with a heavy one. Wilford Bowen was staring at him with a sort of hypnotized horror, while Father Brown listened with his head a little on one side, really interested and attentive. The doctor went on with more hissing emphasis. Why do these idiots always assume that the only person who hates the wife's lover is the wife's husband?

[00:20:35] Nine times out of ten, the person who most hates the wife's lover is the wife who knows what insinuations or treachery he had shown her. Look there.

[00:20:44] He made a momentary gesture toward the red haired woman on the bench. She had lifted her head at last and the tears were drying on her splendid face, but the eyes were fixed on the corpse with an electric glare that had it saw in its something of idiocy. The Reverend Wilford going made a limp gesture as if waving away all desire to know, but Father Brown dusting off his sleeve, some ashes blown from the furnace, spoke in his in different way. Like so many doctors, he said your mental science is really suggestive. It's your physical science that is utterly impossible. I agree. The woman wants to kill the co-respondent with more than the petitioner does. And I agree that a woman will always pick up a small hammer instead of a big one. But the difficulty is, with the physical impossibility, no woman ever born could have smashed a man's skull out flat like that.

[00:21:37] He added reflectively after a pause, If these people haven't grasped the whole of it, the man was actually wearing an iron helmet and the blow scattered it like broken glass. Look at that woman. Look at her arms. Silence held them all up again. And then the doctor said rather sulkily.

[00:21:57] I may be wrong. There are objections to everything, but I stick to the main point. No man, but an idiot would pick up that little hammer if he could use a big hammer. And with that, the lean and quivering hands of Wilfred Bone went up to his head and seemed to clutch his scanty yellow hair after in an instant they dropped and he cried. That was the word I wanted. You said the word. And then he continued, mastering his dis composure.

[00:22:24] The word you said were no man, but an idiot would pick up the small hammer. Yes, said the doctor. Well, Wills had to carry it. No, man, but an idiot did the rest. Stared at him, with eyes arrested and riveted as he went on. In a febrile and feminine agitation. I am a priest, he cried unsteadily. And a priest should be no shelter of blood. I mean that he should bring no one to the gallows. And I thank God that I see the criminal clearly now, because he's a criminal who cannot be brought to the gallows. You will not denounce him? Inquired the doctor. He would not be hanged if I did denounce him, and said Wilfred would a wild. But curiously happy smile. When I mentioned to the church this morning, I found a madman praying there had poor Joe. We've been wrong all his life. God knows what he prayed. But with such strange folk, it's not incredible to suppose that their prayers are all upside down. Very likely a lunatic would pray before killing a man. When I last saw poor Joe, he was with my brother.

[00:23:27] My brother was mocking him.

[00:23:31] By Jove! Cried the doctor. This is talking at last. But but how do you explain? The Reverend Wilford was almost trembling with the excitement of his own glimpse of the truth. Don't you see? Don't you see? He cried, feverish. This is the only theory that covers both the queer things that answers both the riddles. The two riddles are the little hammer and the big blow. The Smith might have struck the big blow, but he would not have chosen the little hammer. His wife would have chosen the little hammer, but she could not have struck the big bow.

[00:23:59] But the mad man might have done both as the little hammer while he was mad. He might've picked up anything. And that's for the big blow. Have you never heard, Doctor, that a maniac in his paroxysm may have the strength of ten men?

[00:24:16] The doctor drew a deep breath and then said, by golly, I believe you got it.

[00:24:22] Father Brown had fixed his eyes on the speaker so long and steadily as to prove that his large gray ox like eyes were not quite so insignificant as the rest of his face.

[00:24:35] When silence had fallen, he said with marked respect. Mr. Bone, yours is the only theory yet propounded which holds water every way and is essentially unassailable. I think, therefore, that you deserve to be told. On my positive knowledge that it is not the true one. And with that, the little old man walked away and stared again at the hammer.

[00:25:03] That fellow seems to know more than he ought to, whispered the doctor peevishly to Wilfred, these popish priests are Deuce Adley Sly. No, no, no, said Boeing, with a sort of wild fatigue, it was the lunatic, it was a lunatic.

[00:25:16] The group of the two clerics and the doctor had fallen away from the more official group containing the inspector and the man he had arrested. Now, however, that their own party had broken up, they heard voices from the others. The priest looked up quietly and then looked down again as he heard the blacksmith say in a loud voice. I hope I've convinced you, Mr. Inspector. I'm a strong man, as you say. But I couldn't have flung my hammer bang here from Greenfield. My hammer hasn't got wings, but it come flying half a mile over hedges and fields. The inspector laughed amicably and said no. I think you can be considered out of it, though. It's one of the Romeos Grenadines eyes I ever saw. Now I can only ask you to give us all the assistance you can in finding a man who's big and strong as yourself or by George. You might be useful if only to hold him. I suppose you yourself have no guess at the man.

[00:26:06] I may have a guess. Said the pale Smith. But it is not a man.

[00:26:12] And then seeing the scared eyes turned towards his wife on the bench, he put his huge hand over her shoulder and said, No, no, woman, neither. You mean ask the inspector jocularly? You don't think cows use hammers, do you?

[00:26:27] I think no thing of flesh held that hammer, said the blacksmith in a stifled voice, mortally speaking.

[00:26:35] I think the man died alone.

[00:26:38] Wellford made a sudden forward movement and peered at him with burning eyes.

[00:26:43] You mean to say Barnes came the sharp voice of the cobbler like a hammer, jumped up of itself and knocked the man down.

[00:26:50] All you gentlemen may stare and snigger. Cried Simeon. You clergymen who tell us on Sunday in what a stillness the Lord smote Seneca did. I believe that one who walks invisible in every house defended the honor of mine and laid the defile our dead before the door of it. I believe the force hand, not blow, was just the force that there is here. Earthquakes and no force less.

[00:27:19] Wilfred's said with a voice utterly undecipherable. I told Norm and myself to beware of the thunderbolt.

[00:27:29] That agent is outside my jurisdiction, said the inspector with a slight smile.

[00:27:33] You are not outside his answer. The Smiths. You to it.

[00:27:38] And turning his brought back, he went into the house. The shaken Wilfred was led away by Father Brown, who had an easy and friendly way with him.

[00:27:48] Let us get out of this horrid place, Mr. Bone, he said. May I look inside your church? I hear it's one of the oldest in England. Wilford Bowen nodded rather eagerly, being only too ready to explain the Gothic splendors to someone more likely to be sympathetic than the Presbyterian blacksmith or the atheist cobbler. Oh, by all means, he said. Let us go in at this side. And he led the way into the high side entrance at the top of a flight of steps. Father Brown was mounting the first step to follow him when he felt a hand on his shoulder and turned round to behold the dark, thin figure of the doctor, his face darker yet with suspicion. Sir, said the physician harshly. You appear to know some secrets in this black business. May I ask if you are going to keep them to yourself?

[00:28:36] Why, Dr Doctor, and said the priest, smiling quite pleasantly.

[00:28:40] There is one very good reason why a man of my trade should keep things to himself when he's not sure of them. And that is that it is so constantly his duty to keep them to himself when he is sure of them.

[00:28:52] But if you think I've been this courteously reticent with you or anyone, I will go to the extreme limit of my custom, I will give you two very large hints. Well, sir, said the doctor gloomily. First, said Father Brown quietly, the thing is, is quite in your own province. It's a matter of physical science. The blacksmith is mistaken. Not perhaps in saying that the blow was divine, but certainly in saying that it came by a miracle. It was no miracle, doctor, except insofar as man is himself a miracle. With his strange and wicked and yet half heroic heart. The force that smashed that skull was a force well known to scientists. And one of the most frequently debated of the laws of nature, the doctor who was looking at him with frowning and tenderness only said in the other hint. Well, the other hint is this, said the priest. Do you remember the blacksmith, though? He believes in miracles, talking scornfully of the impossible fairy tale of that hammer, having wings and flying half a mile across country, and said the doctor.

[00:29:56] I remember that.

[00:29:58] Well, added Father Brown with a broad smile, that fairy tale is the nearest thing to the real truth. It has been said today. And with that, he turned his back and stumped up the steps after the curate.

[00:30:11] The Reverend Wilfred, who had been waiting for him, pale and impatient as if this little delay were the last straw for his nerves, led him immediately to his favorite corner of the church. That part of the gallery closest to the carved roof and lit by the wonderful window with the angel. The little Latin priest explored and admired everything, exhaustively talking cheerfully but in a low voice all the time, and when in the course of his investigation he found the side exit and the winding stare down which Wilfred had rushed to find his brother dead. Father Brown ran not down but up with the agility of a monkey, and his clear voice came from an outer platform above.

[00:30:54] Come up here, Mr. Bone. He called the air will do you good.

[00:30:58] Lo unfollowed him and came out on a kind of stone Galerie or a balcony outside the building from which one could see the illimitable plane in which their small hills stood wooded away to the purple horizon and dotted with villages and farms clear and square, but quite small. Beneath them was the blacksmith's yard where the inspector still stood taking notes, and the corpse still lay like a smashed fly.

[00:31:25] Might be the map of the world, mightn't it? Said Father Brown.

[00:31:29] Yes, said Bo, and rather gravely and nodded his head immediately beneath and about them, the lines of the Gothic building plunged outwards into the void with a sickening swiftness akin to suicide. There is that element of Titan energy and the architecture of the Middle Ages that from whatever aspect it be seen, it always seems to be rushing away like the strong back of some maddened horse. This church was hewn out of ancient and silent stone, bearded with old Phung Goyder's and stained with the nests of birds. And yet when they saw it from below, it sprang like a fountain at the stars. And when they saw it as now from above, it poured like a cataract into a voiceless pit. For these two men on the tower were left alone with the most terrible aspect of Gothic, the monstrous foreshortening and disproportioned that dizzies perspectives the glimpses of great things, small and small things, great a topsy turvy dome of St. in the mid-air details of stone enormous by their proximity were relieved against the pattern of fields and farms pygmy in their distance. A carved bird or beast at the corner seemed like some vast walking or flying dragon wasting the pastures and villages below. The whole atmosphere was dizzy and dangerous, as if men were upheld in air amid the gyrating wings of colossal geni. And the whole of that church, as tall and rich as a cathedral, seemed to sit upon the sunlit country like a cloudburst.

[00:33:08] I think there's something rather dangerous about standing on these high places even to pray, said Father Brown. Heights were made to be looked at, not to be looked from. What do you mean that one may fall over? Asked Wilford. I mean, that one soul may fall if one's body doesn't, said the other priest. I scarcely understand you remarked, bowing indistinctly Look at that blacksmith, for instance, went on Father Brown.

[00:33:35] Khameni, a good man, but not a Christian hard, imperious, unforgiving round his scotch. Religion was made up by men who prayed on hills and high crags and learnt to look down on the world more than to look up at heaven. Humility is the mother of giants. One sees great things from the valley, only small things from the peak.

[00:33:59] But he he didn't do it, said Bowne tremulously. No, said the other in an odd voice. We know he didn't do it.

[00:34:09] After a moment, he resumed looking tranquilly out over the plane with his pale grey eyes. I knew a man, he said, who began by worshipping with others before the altar, but who grew fond of high and lonely places to pray from corners or niches in the belfry or the spire. And once in one of these dizzy places where the whole world seemed to turn under him like a wheel.

[00:34:35] His brain turned also. And he fancied he was God. So even though he was a good man, he committed a great crime. Wilfred's face was turned away, but his bony hands turned to blue and white as they tightened on the parapet of stone.

[00:34:54] He thought it was given to him to judge the world and strike down the center. He would never have had such a thought if he'd been kneeling with the other men upon a floor.

[00:35:04] But he saw all men walking about like insects. He saw one, especially strutting just below him.

[00:35:12] Insulin's and evident by a bright green had. A poisonous insect. Rooks called round the corners of the belfry, but there was no other sound. Father Brown went on.

[00:35:26] And this also tempted him that he had in his hand one of the most awful engines of nature. I mean, gravitation, that mad quickening rush by which all Earth's creatures fly back to her heart when released.

[00:35:40] See, the inspector is strutting just below us in the smithy. If I were to toss a pebble over this parapet, it would be something like a bullet. By the time it struck in. If I were to drop a hammer, even a small hammer. Wilford Bowron threw one leg over the parapet and Father Brown had him in a minute by the collar. Not by that door, he said quite gently. That door leads to hell.

[00:36:12] Boeing staggered back against the wall and stared at him with frightful eyes. How did you know all this? He cried. Are you a devil? I am a man. And so, Father Brown gravely. And therefore, we have all devils in my heart. Listen to me, he said after a short pause. I know what you did at last. I can guess the great part of it.

[00:36:34] When you left your brother, you were wracked with no unrighteous rage to the extent even that you snatched up a small hammer, half inclined to kill him with his foulness in his mouth, recoiling, you thrust it under your buttoned coat instead and rushed into the church. You prayed wildly in many places, under the angel window, upon the platform above, and a higher platform still from which you could see the Colonel's Eastern hat like the back of a green beetle crawling about.

[00:37:05] And something snapped in your soul. And you let God's thunderbolt fall. Wilfred put a weak hand to his head and asked in a low voice.

[00:37:19] How did you know? That is had looked like a green beetle.

[00:37:25] Oh, that, said the other with the shadow of a smile that was common sense. But hear me further. I say I know all this, but no one else shall know it. The next step is for you. I shall take no more steps. I will seal this with the seal of confession. If you ask me why, there are many reasons and only one that concerns you. I leave things to you because you have not yet gone far wrong as assassins go. You did not help fix the crime on the Smith when it was easy or his wife. When that was easy, you tried to fix it on the embassy because you knew that he could not suffer. That was one of the gleams that it is my business to find in assassins. And now come down into the village and go your own way as free as the wind for. I have said my last word. They went down the winding stairs in utter silence and came out into the sunlight by the smithy Wilford going carefully, unlatched the wooden gate of the yard and going up to the inspector said. I wish to give myself up. I have killed my brother.

[00:38:41] And a couple weeks.

[00:38:52] This podcast was presented by the Seattle Public Library and Foundation and made possible by your contributions to the Seattle Public Library Foundation. Thanks for listening.