[00:00:35] Good afternoon everybody welcome to Thrilling Tales or as we call it in October, Chilling Tales. This is our story time for grown ups it typically happens twice each month but in October in honor of the season we're actually doing weekly Chilling Tales the full schedule is here a variety of different kinds of spooky stories including today we have actually a really lovely kind of old fashioned one which I'm I'm glad of actually because it will feel like a trip away from the world that we're living in right now. But it's a lovely ghost story. Oh my. Who am I. My name is David. I'm a librarian here I work on the third floor up in reader services if you're ever looking for something good to read do come and visit us. We also have Elka in addition to the Chilling Tales here we have spooky stories coming up in bars towards the end of the month. I will tell you there may be some repeats between daytime story times and some of those nighttime story times but you're in a bar so you can have a drink and it doesn't really matter all that much. So I hope maybe some of you can join us that those we've got four different events in bars all over the city and the details are there. Okay let's get underway. Our main story today we do a lot of different kinds of stories here and thrilling tales old news some are very new. Seldom do we go back quite this far. This one is from the 80s 90s. It's a classic Victorian ghost story by writer Edith Nesbit who's probably best known for her series of children's books the the railway.

[00:02:08] What are they the Railway Children. You know those Zamboni. Yeah those ones. But she also wrote some spooky stories including this one called The Ebony frame to be rich is a luxurious sensation.

[00:02:24] The more so when you have plumb the depths of hard up ness as a Fleet Street hack a reporter and unappreciated journalist all callings utterly inconsistent with one's family feeling and one's direct descent from money when my aunt Dorcas died and left me seven hundred a year and a furnished house in Chelsea. I felt that life had nothing left to offer except immediate possession of the legacy even Mildred Mayhew whom I had hitherto regarded as my life's light became less luminous I was not engaged to Mildred but I lodged with her mother and I sang duets with Mildred and gave her gloves when it would run to it which was seldom.
She was a dear good girl and I meant to marry her someday. It's very nice to feel that a good little woman is thinking of you. It helps you in your work and it is pleasant to know that she will say yes when you say will you but my legacy almost put Mildred out of my head especially as she was staying with friends in the country before the gloss was off.

My new morning I was seated in my aunt's armchair in front of the fire in the drawing room of my own house my own house.

It was grand but rather lonely.

I didn't think of Mildred just then the room was comfortably furnished with rosewood and damask on the walls hung a few fairly good oil paintings but the space above the mantelpiece was disfigured by an exceedingly bad print.

The trial of Lord William Russell framed in a dark frame. I got up to look at it. I had visited my aunt with dutiful regularity but I never remembered seeing this frame before. It was not intended for a print but for an oil painting. It was a fine Ebony beautifully and curiously carved. I looked at it with growing interest and when my aunt's housemaid I had retained her modest staff of servants came in with the lamp. I asked her how long the print had been there oh mistress only brought it two days before she took ill she said.

But the frame she didn't want to buy a new one so she got this out of the attic. There's lots of curious old things there sir that my aunt had this frame long. Oh yes sir it must have come long before I did and I've been here seven years come Christmas. There was a picture in it that's upstairs too. But it's that black and ugly it might as well be a chimney back I felt a desire to see this picture. What if it were some priceless old master in which my aunt's eyes had seen only rubbish directly after breakfast next morning. I paid a visit to the attic. It was crammed with old furniture enough to stock a curiosity shop all the house was furnished solidly in the middle Victorian style. And in this room everything not in keeping with the drawing room suite ideal was stowed away tables of poppy mâché and mother of pearl straight backed chairs with twisted feet and faded needlework cushions fire screens of gilded carving and beaded banners oak bureaus with brass handles a little work table with its faded moth eaten silk flute things hanging in disconsolate shreds on these and the dust that covered them blazed.

The full daylight as I pulled up the blinds I promised myself a good time in re enshrining these household gods in my parlor and promoting the Victorian suite to the attic but at present my business was to find the picture as black as the chimney back and presently behind a heap of fenders and boxes I found it Jane the housemaid identified it once I took it downstairs carefully and examined it neither subject nor colour was distinguishable.

There was a splotch of a darker tint in the middle but whether it was a figure or tree or house no man could have told it seemed to be painted on a very thick panel bound with leather I decided to send it to one of those persons who pour on rotting family portraits the water of eternal youth. But even as I did so I thought why not try my own restorative hand corner of it my bath sponge soap and nail brush vigorously applied for a few seconds showed me that there was no picture to clean bare oak presented itself to my preserving brush.

[00:07:30] I tried the other side Jane watching me with indulgent interest the same result and the truth dawned on me why was the panel so thick I tore off the leather binding and the panel divided and fell to the ground and a cloud of dust. There were two pictures and they had been nailed face to face I leaned them against the wall and the next moment I was leaning against it myself for one of the pictures was myself a perfect portrait.

[00:08:10] No shade of expression or turn of feature wanting myself in the dress that men wore when James the first was king had this been done and how. Without my knowledge was this some whim of my aunt's Lord sir. The shrill surprise of Jane at my elbow. What a lovely photo it is. Was it a fancy ball sir. Yes I stammered I I don't think I want anything more. You can go. She went and I turned still with my heart beating violently to the other picture.

[00:08:46] This was a beautiful woman's picture very beautiful she was.

[00:08:52] I noted all her beauties are straight nose low brows full lips thin hands large deep luminous eyes she wore a black velvet gown. It was a three quarter length portrait and her arms rested on a table beside her and her head on her hands. But her face was turned full forward and her eyes met those of the spectator bewilderingly on the table by her were compasses and shining instruments whose uses I did not know books a goblet and a heap of papers and pens. I saw all this afterwards. I believe it was a quarter of an hour before I could turn my eyes from her never seen any other eyes like hers. They appealed as a child's or a dog's do they commanded as might those of an empress. Shall I sweep up the dust sir.

[00:09:50] Curiosity had brought Jane back. I acceded. I turned from her. My portrait I kept between her and the woman in the black velvet when I was alone again. I tore down the trial of William Russell and I put the picture of the woman in it strong Ebony frame then I wrote to the frame maker for a frame for my portrait. It had so long lived face to face with this beautiful which that I had not the heart to banish it from her presence.

[00:10:21] I suppose I'm sentimental if it be sentimental to think such things as that the new frame came home and I hung it opposite the fireplace and exhaustive search among my aunt's papers showed no explanation of the portrait of myself. No history of the portrait of the woman with the wonderful eyes. I only learned that all the old furniture together had come to my aunt at the death of my great uncle the head of the family and I should have concluded that the resemblance was only a family one if everyone who came in had not exclaimed that the speaking likeness I adopted Jane's fancy ball explanation and their one might suppose the matter of portraits ended.
One might suppose it that is if there was not evidently a good deal more written here about it however to me then the matter seemed ended. I went to see Mildred. I invited her and her mother to come and stay with me I rather avoided glancing at the picture in the Ebony frame I could not forget nor remember without singular emotion the look in the eyes of that woman when mine first met them I shrank from meeting that look again I reorganized the house somewhat preparing for Mildred's visit.

I brought down much of the old fashioned furniture and after a long day of arranging and rearranging. I sat down before the fire and lying back in a pleasant languor I idly raised my eyes to the picture of the woman I met her dark deep Hazel Eyes and once more my gaze was held fixed as by strong magic the kind of fascination that keeps one sometimes staring for whole minutes into one's own eyes in the glass gazed into her eyes.

I felt my own dilate pricked with a smart like the smart tears.

I wish I said oh how I wish you were a woman not a picture.

Come down come down.

I laughed at myself as I spoke but even as I laughed I held out my arms I was not sleepy I was not drunk I was as wide awake and as sober as ever was a man in the world and yet as I held out my arms I saw the eyes of the picture dilate her lips trembling.

If I were to be hanged for saying it it is true her hands moved slightly sort of flicker of a smile passed over her face I sprang to my feet.

Well this won't do. I said aloud firelight does play strange tricks I'll I'll have the lamp I made for the bell my hand was on it when I heard a sound behind me and turned the bell still and rung the fire had burned glow in the corners of the room were deeply shadowed.

But surely there behind the tall worked chair was something darker than a shadow I must face this out I said or I shall never be able to face myself again.

I left the bell. I seized the poker and battered the dull coals to a blaze then I stepped back resolutely and looked at the picture the mini frame was empty from the shadow of the work chair came a soft rustle and out of the shadow the woman of the picture was coming coming towards me.

I hope I shall never again know a moment of terror as blank and absolute I could not have moved or spoken to save my life either all the known laws of nature were nothing or I was mad I stood trembling.

But I am thankful to remember I stood still while the Black Velvet Gown swept across the hearth rug towards me the next moment a hand touched me a hand soft warm and human and a low voice said you called me.
I am here at that touch and that voice.

The world seemed to give a sort of a bewildering half turn. I hardly know how to express it but at once it seemed not awful not even unusual for portraits to become flesh only. Most natural most right most unspeakably fortunate I laid my hand on her as I looked from her to my portrait. I could not see it in the firelight.

We are not strangers. I said oh no not the strangers.

Those luminous eyes were looking up into mine those red lips were near me with a passionate cry a sense of having recovered life's one great good that had seemed wholly lost I clasped her in my arms she was no ghost she was a woman the only woman in the world how long. I said How long is it since I lost you she leaned back hanging her full weight on the hands that were clasped behind my head.

How can I tell. How long. There is no time in hell she answered.

It was not a dream. No. There are no such dreams.

I wish to God there could be when in dreams do I see her eyes hear her voice feel her lips against my cheek hold her hands to my lips as I did that night the Supreme night of my life. At first we hardly spoke it seemed enough. After long grief and pain to feel the arms of my true love round me once again it's very difficult to tell my story. There are no words to express the sense of glad reunion the complete realization of every hope and dream of a life that came upon me as I sat with my hand in hers and looked into her eyes.

How could it have been a dream.

When I left her sitting in the straight back chair and I went down to the kitchen to tell the maids that I should want nothing more that I was busy and I did not wish to be disturbed and when I fetched wood for the fire with my own hands and bringing it and I found her still sitting there saw the little brown head turn as I entered saw the love in her dear eyes when I threw myself at her feet and I bless the day I was born since life had given me this not a thought of Mildred. All other things in my life were a dream this it's one splendid reality I'm wondering she said after a while when we had made such cheer each of the other as true lovers may after long parting and wondering how much you remember of our past I remember nothing but that I love you that I have loved you all my life you remember nothing really nothing only that I am truly yours that we have both suffered that tell me my mistress dear all that you remember explain it all to me Make me understand you had the high I don't want to understand it is enough that we are together if it was a dream I have I never dreamed it again she leaned down towards me her arm lay on my neck and drew my head till it rested on her shoulder I am a ghost I suppose she said laughing softly and her laughter stirred memories which I just grasped that and just missed but you and I know better don't we I would tell you everything you've forgotten we loved each other but well no you've not forgotten that and when you came back from the wars we were to be married our pictures were painted before you went away you know I was more learned than women of that day dear one when you were gone they said I was a witch they tried me they said I should be burned just because I had looked at the stars and gained more knowledge than other women they must needs bind me to a stake and let me be eaten by the fire and you far away her whole body trembled and shrank OH LOVE WHAT DREAM WOULD HAVE TOLD ME THAT MY KISSES would sue even that memory The night before she went on the devil did come to me I was innocent before you know it don't you and even then my sin was for you for you because of the exceeding love I bore you the devil came and I sold my soul to eternal flame but I got a good price I got the right to come back through my picture if anyone looking at it wished for me as long as my pictures stayed in its Ebony frame.

That frame was not carved by man's hand I got the right to come back to you Oh my heart's heart and another thing I won which you shall hear a non they burned me for which they made me suffer hell on earth.

Those those faces all crowding around the crackling wood and the choking smell of the smoke.

Oh love no more no no no more when my mother sat that night before my picture she wept and cried come back my poor lost child and I went to see her with glad leaps of heart dear she shrieked and moaned of ghosts she had our pictures covered from sight and put again in the Ebony frame she had promised me that my picture should stay always there through all these years your face was against mine she paused the man you loved you came home my picture was gone. They lied to you and you married another woman but someday I knew that you would walk the world again and that I should find you the other gain I asked the other gain she said slowly I gave my soul for it is this if you also will give up your hopes of heaven I can remain a woman I can remain in your world I can be your wife Oh my dear after all these years at last. At last if I sacrifice my soul I said slowly and the words did not seem an imbecility if I sacrifice my soul I win you my love it's a contradiction in terms.

You are my soul. Her eyes looked straight into mine whatever might happen whatever did happen whatever may happen our two souls in that moment met and become one then you choose you deliberately choose to give up your hopes of heaven for me as I gave up mine for you I will not I said give up my hopes of heaven on any terms tell me what I must do but you and I may make our heaven here as now I will tell you tomorrow she said be alone here tomorrow night twelve is a ghost time isn't it.

And then I will come out of the picture and never go back into it I shall live with you and die and be buried and there will be an end of me but we shall live. First my heart's heart I laid my head on her knee a strange drowsiness overcame me holding her hand against my cheek I lost consciousness when I awoke the gray November day was glimmering ghost like
Through the uncertain window my head was pillow on my arm and rested I raised my head quickly not on my lady's knee but on the needle worked cushion of the straight back chair I sprang to my feet I was stiff with cold and dazed with dreams but I turned my eyes on the picture and there she sat my lady my dear love I held out my arms. But the passionate cry that I would have uttered died on my lips. She had said 12 o'clock her latest word was my law.

So I only stood in front of the picture and gazed into those gray green eyes till tears of passionate happiness filled my own Oh my dear my dear how shall I pass the hours until I see you again no thought then of my whole life's completion and consummation being a dream.

I staggered up to my room fell across my bed and slept heavily and dreamless sleep. When I woke it was high noon Mildred and her mother were coming to lunch. I remembered at one o'clock Mildred coming and her existence now indeed the dream began with a penetrating sense of the futility of any action apart from her. I gave the necessary orders for the reception of my guests.

When Mildred and her mother came I received them with cordiality but my genial phrases all seemed to be someone else's. My voice sounded like an echo. My heart was not there. Still. The situation was not intolerable until the hour when afternoon tea was served in the drawing room. Mildred and my mother kept the conversational pot boiling with a profusion of genteel commonplaces and I bore it has one insight of heaven can bear mild purgatory. I looked up at my sweetheart in the Ebony frame and I felt that anything which might happen any irresponsible imbecility any bathhouse of boredom was nothing if after all. She came to me again and yet when Mildred two looked at the portrait and said Well doesn't she think a lot of herself theatrical character I suppose one of your flames Mr. Dean. I had a sickening sense of impotent irritation which became absolute torture. When Mildred. How could I have ever admired that chocolate box barmaids style of prettiness. Threw herself into the high back chair covering the needlework with ridiculous allowances and added silence gives consent. Who is it Mr. de bean. Tell us about her. I'm sure she has a story for a little Mildred sitting there smiling serene in her confidence that her every word charmed me sitting there with her rather pinched waist her rather tight boots her rather vulgar voice sitting in the chair where my dear lady had sat when she told me her story I could not bear it.

Don't sit there I said it.

It's not comfortable but the girl would not be warned with a laugh that said every nerve in my body vibrating with annoyance she said Oh dear I mustn't sit in the same chair as your black velvet woman.

I looked at the chair in the picture. It was the same and in her chair Mildred was sitting then a horrible sense of the reality of Mildred came upon me.

Was all this a reality after all.
But for fortunate chance might Mildred have occupied not only her chair but her place in my life I rose. I hope you will not think me very rude I said but I am obliged to go out. I forget what appointment I alleged the lie came readily enough I faced Mildred's pouts with the hope that she and her mother would not wait dinner for me. I fled in another minute I was safe alone under the chill cloudy autumn sky free to think think think of my dear lady I walked for hours along streets and squares I lived over and over again every look word and hand touch every kiss.

I was completely unspeakably happy Mildred was utterly forgotten my lady of the Ebony frame filled my heart and soul and spirit as I heard eleven boom through the fog I turned and went home. When I got to my street I found a crowd surging through it a strong red light filling the air. The house was on fire mine. I elbowed my way through the crowd. The picture of my lady that at least I could save as I sprang up the steps I saw as in a dream.

Yes all of this was really dreamlike. I saw Mildred leaning out on the first floor window wringing her hands. Come back sir. Cried a fireman we'll get the young lady out right enough but my lady. The stairs were crackling smoking and as hot as hell I went up to the room where her picture was strange to say I only felt that the picture was a thing that we should like to look on through the long glad wedded life that was to be ours. I never thought of it as being one with her as I reached the first floor. I felt arms about my neck.

The smoke was too thick for me to distinguish features. Save me a voice whispered I clasp the figure in my arms and I bought with a strange dis ease down the shaking stairs and out into safety.

It was Mildred.

I knew that directly I clasped her stand back. Cried the crowd. Everyone's safe. Cried a fireman. The flames leaped from every window. The sky grew redder and redder I sprang from the hands that would have held me.

I leaped up the steps I crawled up the stairs.

Suddenly the whole horror came to me as long as my picture remains in the Ebony frame.

What if picture and frame perished together I fought with the fire and with my own choking inability to fight with it I I pushed on I must save my picture.

I reached the drawing room and as I sprang in I saw my lady. I swear it through the smoke and the flames hold out her arms to me to me who came too late to save her to save my own life.

Joy never saw again before I could reach her or cry out to her.

I felt the floor yield beneath my feet and I fell into the flames below.
How did they save me. What does that matter. They saved me somehow.

Curse them every stick of my aunt's furniture was destroyed. My friends pointed out that as the furniture was heavily insured the carelessness of a nightly studious housemaid had done me no harm no harm.

That was how I won and lost my only love I deny with all my soul in the denial that it was a dream. There are no such dreams dreams of longing and pain. There are in plenty but dreams of complete of unspeakable happiness No. Now it's the rest of life

That is a dream if I think that why have I married Mildred and grown stout and dull and prosperous I tell you.

It is all this. That is the dream my dear lady. Only is the reality and what does it matter what one does in a dream
